Intercultural learning and better living in multicultural societies

Ensuring that schools are places where children learn to live in diversity is seen as the most effective way of helping people live better together in multicultural environment in both SEM and European countries (91% and 93% respectively). Education for youth and trainings in diversity management are also effective tools to prevent hate speech and polarisation in society for 81% of Europeans and 83% of SEM respondents. A vast majority of EuroMed people believe the closer EuroMed cooperation would offer more opportunities for trainings and education.

GAINS FROM EURO-MED COOPERATION

By reinforcing closer cooperation among MED countries, the society can gain in education and training?
